IBM

<http://www.ibm.com/>

Company Description: In 2003, IBM undertook the first disciplined reexamination of our values in nearly 100 years. Through “ValuesJam” – an unprecedented 72-hour discussion on IBM’s global intranet – IBMers came together to define the essence of the company. The result? A set of core values – defined by IBMers for IBMers – that shape everything we do and every choice we make on behalf of the company.

The shared set of values helps us make decisions and, in the process, makes our company great. But their real influence occurs when we apply these values to our personal work and our interactions with one another and the wider world.

Why should you work at IBM?

You thrive on being challenged, and interacting with diverse people with unique perspectives, who are at the top of their game. You seek new opportunities, and embrace change.

You want to:

Work for the world.

It’s possible at IBM. Global integration is the way we drive real results for clients in the 170 countries we serve. That means ensuring that the right people are in the right place at the right time - in real time. At IBM, there are many ways to be the “right” person. Cultivate your expertise, use your knowledge to the fullest extent, or re-invent yourself, without ever having to leave the company.

Work, your way.

Global innovation demands diverse employees and attractive work/life initiatives that sustain, and retain, them. It means getting work done in the best possible way, with a focus on business results, and not where and when people do their work. IBM gives you the power to design your workday, and your life, according to your unique style and needs.

Make a difference.

IBM leads the business world in corporate and environmental responsibility. At IBM, you can give back to the world using cutting-edge technology to help us address some of society's most complex problems.
